Impact of rupee convertibility on exporters porters

671. PROF. SAURIN BHATTACHARYA: Will the Minister of COMMERCE be pleased to state:

(a) whether partial convertibility of rupee could act against the interest of exporters more than in the case of Exim Scrips;

(b) if so, how Government propose to protect their interest so that their exporting zeal remain unabated;

(c) whether export promotion will not be hindered if inflation continues unabated; and

(d) how far fiscal policies are helpful for export promotion?

THE MINISTER OF STATE OF THE MINISTRY OF COMMERCE (SHRI P. CHIDAMBARAM) (a) and (b) The partial convertibility of rupee was introduced to encourage exports and faciliate essential imports so that we have a viable balance of trade. With the aim of making the rupee fully convertible on the trade account, the Eximscrip system was replaced by the partial convertibility of the rupee which allowed exporters to derive benefit by way of a market premium on 60% of their foreign exchange earnings.

(c) Continuation or acceleration of inflation will create imbalances in the overall economy and thus may affect exports by making the products uncompetitive in the international market.

(d) Fiscal policies are undertaken with a view to contain the budgetary deficit and inflation. Hence, they are helpful to promote exports. More specifically in the Budget for 1992-93 the Government have provided greater encouragment to exports by reducing substantially import duties on raw materials and capital goods and by lowering the maximum rate of tariffs.
